Can pigs fly?

Shocked villagers of Brisley Norfolk awoke this morning Thursday 14th October, to the remarkable news that their village had been visited by some hovering hogs during the night. There were surprising scenes in the little village, scenes of destruction: broken lamp posts, litter over the streets, roof tiles knocked off the houses of the villagers and the pigs were exhausted, sleeping in their stys. How is this Possible? How on earth are pigs flying? Police are uncertain of how to explain this extraordinary phenomenon.

During our interview, the crazy nature of this episode was brought to our attention by Police Constable William Pink.

Local farmer, James Piggles remarked "I was unable to sleep because me back hurt after ploughing the fields, so I made meself a cheese sandwich. I caught a glimpse of a pink object I did and I suddenly realised it was me pig Maybel!! NEVER HAVE I EVER Seen a pig fly!"

Local pensioner, Lucy Smith, (84) who has lived in Brisley all her life, slowly stated, "I was sitting in my armchair watching the box when I must have drifted off. I awoke and the TV was on full blast! My remote was crushed to pieces and when I went to make a spot of lunch and there was a pig's hoof print in my butter!"

Local doctor Toby Longwill Said "I have NEVER EVER in all my days seen a flying pig!"

Residents of this quiet village are now distressed and have talked about frantic mooing of the cows early this morning in their pen in the yard. The chickens are hiding away because of this strange happening.

The Police are continuing their enquiries and would like to speak to other witnesses of the incident. They have set up an incident line: 0798 629.
